A WALKOVER FOR LINDSAY.

The Glove Contest at South Omaha Last Night.

KNOCKED ALL ABOUT THE RING.

The Man From the Pacific Coast Proves No Match For the Nebraska Middle-Weight-A Rough and Tumble Affair.

Everybody Took a Hand.

The greatest pugilistic event within the annals of Omaha or its vicinity, was the fifteen round fight between Jimmy Lindsay, the middle-weight champion of Nebraska, and as good a man as there is in the world in his class, and Jack Demosey, the alleged champion of California, at South Omaha last night. Lindsay had a waikover, knocking his so-called doughty opponent all about the ring, and in the six rough-and-tumble rounds that were fought, whipping his man three-fold over, As THE BEE predicted, Lindsay came out of the contest victorious, and his friends, as well as enemies, must perforce acknowledge him a No. 1 man.

The fight took place in Rowley's hall, and as early as 9 o'clock the spacious apartment was packed a la sardine with a moticy assemblage of doctors, lawyers, business men, laborers, hoodlams and toughs, the majority of whom went down from this city, and put up $2 a head to witness the battle.

The articles of agreement called for a fif-teen-round contest, two-ounce gloves, Queensberry rules, for 75 and 25 per cent of the gross gate.

After the immense audience had grown weary with waiting, a master of ceremonies was chosen in the person of Bob Clancy, ex-manager of Pat Killen, and the first exhibi tion on the evening's card was an-nounced. This was a three-round centest between that elever boxer, Arthur Rothery, who has won merited fame in the light-weight class, and Patsey McCartin, of St. Paul. It was an interesting bout, Rothery manifesting many of the points of a cun-ning and scientific man. Following this came a three-round setto between Tommy Brooks, the champion light weight of Iowa, and Frank Allen, a luggy farmer, who thinks he can fight, but can't. Brooks knocked him flown and smashed him in the proboscis until he resembled an anarchist flag more than a thing in human shape. Two kids, Murphy and McGinnis, then entertained the impa-tient crowd for ten minutes longer, when the event of the evening was on.

After a long and vexatious wrangle among the adherents of the two principals, Captain O'Malley, who was about as fitted for the position as a horse would be to play the piano, was chosen referee, and Manager of Cere-monies Clancy read the articles of agreement and called for the premier performers in the night's exhibition. Lindsay had been in waiting more than a half hour, but Dempsey was the first to shy his castor and crawl through the ropes, closely followed by his esquires, Arthur Rothery and Patsey McCartin. Lindsay was not much behind hand, but accompanied by his handlers, Professor Billy Hawley land young Whistler, soon followed into the squared cir-cle and confidently and definitly took his seat in his corner. Colonel Beet was then selected as Dempsey's timekeeper and Jim Faulkner for Lindsay, and after some dicker ing over the size of the gloves, the men were weighed and ordered to shake hands. It might be proper to state that Dempsey weighed in at 131 pounds and Lindsay at 141.

At precisely half past 11 the men shook hands amidst a breathless silence and squared themselves. Lindsay, who stripped like a bird, a model athlete, from the play of his muscles under the fair skin of his brawny arms, to the stocky position on his well rounded and symmetrical legs, stood bold, upright and defiant, like a gladiator of old, while Dempsey, who has the mug of the born fighter, and a frame of abnormal development, looked as if he meant to pounce upon his weightier adversary and swallow him whole, tights, gloves, stocks, pumps and all. Ah! how he regrets the hour.

The first round was tame, but as pretty and as clean cut an exhibition of scientific pugilism as one could wish to see, and only resulted in a single blow being struck, and that by Lindsay, which landed on the Californian's victualing department and apprised him that he was not toying with a novice. Each man seemed to be sizing up novice. Each man seemed to be sizing up the other, and while Dempsey was the aggressor it was patent to the experienced eye that Lindsay was his master.

The one minute's rest up, and the men were face to face again. After a tiresome amount of calesthenic exercise, Dempsey made a feint with his left, and as Lindsay to get in with his right, struck out viciously with his own dexter duke, but only to come in contact with the unsubstantial air. The foxey Lindsay had ducked, and recoverifig with lightning quickness, he gave Mr. Dempsey a crosscounter in the jaw that made his teeth rattle. Then followed some rapid fighting, all in Lindsay's favor, and the two men clinched. Right here the first foul was committed. Demsey delivering an upper cut with his formidable left, as they stood in close embrace. This was too much for the irascible Lindsay, and he picked up his truculent adversary and slammed him down on the planks hard enough to kill a horse. From this point on pandemonium reigned, and the battle was nothing but a rough-and-tumble fight to the close, but throughout it all Lindsa showing such superior skill, strength, finesse and generalship as leaves no doubt but what he could whip Dempsey to a stand-still, under any rules, any circumstances, at any time or any place. In the succeeding three rounds, which were a series of palpa-ble fouls on both sides, he knocked the Californian down no less than four times, splashed the cochineal all over his face and made him see more heavenly constellations in a minute than he will see in a lifetime, and he may live to the age of Methuselah. The backers of the men, the Rothery faction on the side of Dempsey, and the Fallon clan on the other, together with the police and excited outsiders swarmed upon the stage. until the scene looked as if the in-ferno had broken loose. After the expenditure of a vast deal of lung power, Chief of Police McCracken restored a semblance of order, and Referee O'Malley called for one more round. The men sprang like tigers to the center of the floor, and in a jiffy the ferocious Dempsey was sprawling on all fours on the west side of the ring, where a well developed blow of Lindsay's had sent him. As he oscillated here, like a man in a stuper, all but knocked out, Lindsay fours very foolishly gave him a smack in the eye, a deliberate foul, that well high made a hole in the wall with his cucurbitaceous nut. Again, amidst the deafening yells and shricks of the audience the backers and and heclors and policemen swarmed upon the stage like bees, and in sheer desperation Referee O'Malley decided the fight a draw and fled for his life.

In wild confusion the crowd dispersed, and the 11:55 dummy, which was obligingly held until 12:50, pulled out from that classic burg packed with as disgusted, noisy and excited a jam of humanity as can well be imagined. In conclusion it is but proper to state that the entire police force of South Omaha, and the bulk of the members of the city council witnessed all these digraceful scenes, and that the fight was a dead, raw easy one for champion Jimmy Lindsey.

In the Police Court. F. Kinney was brought before Judge Berkayesterday, charged with bribery on election day. Frank Bellamy was the principal witness. He swore to having seen Kinney give a man named Mathewson some money, and that the latter voted. Kinney said he was simply paying off an old debt. The judge thought there was no evidence to convict and discharged the prisoner.

The case against Dr. Connell, similar to the above and arising out of that case, was not called, there being no evidence.

Ed Ball, the notorious crook and thief, was sent to jail for fifty days for stealing a lap robe. A warrant for Ball's arrest awaits him on his release from jail on a similar charge. The robe in this case is one of

A BRIDEGROOM IN TEARS.

The Strange Romance of a Young Episcopal Clergyman.

LOVED HER ONLY AS A MOTHER.

When the Handsome Widow Christie Proposed Rev. Auld Accepted, But He Afterwards Renounced Ber at the Altar.

Wedded But No Wife.

New York, Dec. 7.—This story is a ro-mance, for the like of which one would search fiction in vain. Rev. H. F. Auld, of Morrisana, a young Episcopal clergyman, who, his friends say, was perfectly innocent, met Mrs. Emma Helen Christie, a widow, about two years ago, and it is said she bewitched him, and forced him to betroth himself to her in 1887. Then he did not want to marry her, and the widow sent to Bishop Potter, who advised the young clergyman to marry her. He did so, but before the ceremony solemn'y declared that he did not love her and that he would never allow her to enter his house.

Mrs. Emma Helen Christie is the handsome young widow of a popular hardware merchant of Morrisana. She fives with her brother in a modest little house with a pretty bay window, at No. 611 East One Hundred and Fortieth street. Three doors further down, in a similar house, at No. 601, live the Rev. H. F. Auld, the young rector of St. Mary's, and his mother, and Mrs. Christie could see the clergyman every day reading in his bay window, writing his sermons, and going out on his pastoral visits. It was in the early spring, when birds were beginning to mate, that the widow thought that she would seek religious consolation. She attended the lenten services. She embroidered altar cloths and worked with her own fair hands a pair of slippers and chest protector for her pastor.

Mrs. Auld, the mother of the rector, is a handsome old lady, who lives only for her son. It has been her boast that Harry thought son, it has been her boast that raary though all women like his mother. He had done good work in the little parish, helped to settle a church debt and preached the most charm-ing of sermons. The clergyman's friends say that the widow completely bewitched him. She would command him to come to her, and he would obey. She made him fetch and carry, and he was her most abject slave. She ran the church and inspired the sermons "She was determined to marry my son," sale Mrs. Auld to a friend yesterday. "She gained the most murvelous influence over him, He grew pale and thin. He feared her, and sh compelled him to do whalever she wished."

According to both parties, the affection was purely of a platonic nature. The attachment insted a year, when, on March 14, 1887, ac-cording to Mr. Auld's friends, the widow, taking leap year by the forelock, proposed marriage. This was quite a shock to Mr Auld, who had loved her as a mother only She took him to St. Paul's church, corner o One Hundred and Fortleth street and Third avenue, however, requesting the clergyman there to marry them. The reverend gentle man refused on the ground that it was Lent Mrs. Christie then proposed a solemn be trothal, which was willingly entered into b Mr. Auld, and all parties signed the agreement of betrothal as printed above. The presiding clergyman gave the happy lovers his benediction, and all went as merry as a wedding bell. Mrs. Auld, the clergyman's mother, however, got wind of the affair and questioned her son about his engagement. Then came the trouble. Mr. Auld confessed to his mother that he did not love his bride and that he would never marry her if he could get out of doing so Mrs. Christie vowed she loved her future husband dearly and would be his wife. To Mr. Auld's credit, he did everything to avoid Mr. Auld's credit, he did everything to avoid a scandal. He told Mrs. Christie that he could never love her, or even respect her as a wife, but that if she insisted he would marry her. He resigned his parish, made arrangements to go to another, and told her that on his departure the ceremony would be performed. Mrs. Christie, although the betrothal had been kept a secret, felt that she was compromised, and threat-ened legal proceedings if the promised marriage did not take place imme-diately. In law Mrs. Christie held that she marriage did not take place immediately. In law, Mrs. Christie held that she was Mrs. Auld and religious recognition must be at once made. Mr. Auld still hesitating, Mrs. Christie appealed to Bishop Potter, who summoned all parties to the cas-

Potter, who summoned all parties to the case before hearing him.

After hearing the evidence the bishop wrote a letter to Mr. Auld sympathizing with him, but telling him he was bound to keep his word and marry Mrs. Christic. Bishop Potter offered to transfer the young clergy man to another parish and give him first class recommendations. Last Wednesday Mr. Auld, accompanied by a friend, repaired to the residence of Rev. H. S. Smith and the marriage ceremony was performed. It was a most dramatic affair.

Before the witnesses Mr. Auld solemnly renounced Mrs. Christie, saying: "I will let you be my wife only in name. I will never ive with you. I will try and provide for you but you must never darken my threshold."

Mrs. Christie was just as emphatic. "I love him still," she cried. "and I marry him simply for the love I bear him."

The minister insisted on performing the ceremony, and the unhappy twain were made man and wife. Mrs. Christie went back to her home and Mr. Auld rejoined his mother. They have never laid eyes on each other since their wed ding day. Bishop Potter, however, wrote a kind letter to the unfortunate bridegroom and told him he had behaved like an honorable man and saved the church from a scan Last night a reporter called on the Rev.

Mr. Auld. He is a young man, very delicate and afflicted with a constant twitching of the head. He was extremely nervous, and when the reporter stated his mission, broke down "I have tried so hard to do right," he almost cried. "There has been nothing wrong between Mrs. Christie and myself, and now I am ruined forever because I was weak and foolish. I will only make this statement: I engaged myself solemnly to Mrs. Christi and, according to my promise, I have married her. That is all I have to say about it Mrs. Auld, the mother of the reverend gen-tleman, also declined to make a statement, except to the effect that her son had been persecuted.

"He has been followed by that designing woman until she married him. My poor boy he thought every woman like his mother. She said she loved him, and now she makes pub lie the engagement, which she had promised to keep secret."

Mr. Auld, in listening, was so much af-Mr. Add, in listening, was so finder at feeted by the turn the matter had taken that he began to weep. "There is nothing more for me to do but to die," he said. "My career is ruined. I can see the heading in the paper to-morrow. 'Another Minister Gone Wrong,' and I have been so innocent and tried to do so much to suppress the scandal."

"How did this woman come to have such an influence over you!" asked the reporter.
Mr. Auid and his mother both grouned in answer. A family consultation was then held and a friend was called in, but they would say to more. would say no more.
When the reporter left the Auld family were still debating the great misfortune that had come upon them.

The fair bride was next visited. After a great deal of ringing, a gentleman in dream robes made his appearance at an upper win-dow. "You cannot see Mrs. Auid," he said, in reply to the reporter's question; "but you can see her husband. He lives three doors up the street; he does not stay here."

From several people the reporter learned that the Rev. Mr. Auld had been paying attention to the fair widow for some time, and that his love-making had been noticed by the

"The foundation for this rumer, I judge, is this," he said: "Fairbanks & Co., of Chi cago, who deal in lard only, made an effort cage, who deal in lard only, made an effort to have freight rates changed so as to give them a practical monopoly on lard, and I sent a telegram to Chicago protesting against it. We have a freight rate to Chicago on the lard schedule freights of 12½ cents, while dressed beef is scheduled at 23 cents, and when we ship part of a car of beef and fill the balance of the car with lard and other cheap-rate freight, Fairbanks wanted to have the 25-cent rate charged on the whole lot in the 25-cent rate charged on the whole lot in the car. Another thing which may hav given currency to this report, or at least seems to verify, is that the different houses here, small compared with the large ones in Chicago, often buy large consignments of cattle, more than any one house can handle, and divide the stock up among themselves. This is never done in Chicago. If there is a poel, combine or monopoly formed, know nothing about it, and do not believe it has been done."

A representative man well in the privy do ings of George H. Hammond & Co.'s pack-ing houses said: "No, sir; the Hammond houses are alone and for themselves. The houses are alone and for themselves. # THE DALY CASE.

Arraignment of the Conspirators in

New York. New York, Dec. 7.—Addie Stanton, Ella Hammond, Edward Meredith and Henry Hermann were to-day arraigned in a crowded court room, charged with having attempted o rob and kill Phil Daly, a sporting man, in a Fourth avenue flat last Monday. Hermann has made a full confession. The other three prisoners-Mrs. Stanton, Hammond and Meredith-were held without bail to await the action of the grand jury. Added to the interest in the court scene was the fact that during the morning Mrs. Anna Hermann, the aged mother of Hermann, attempted suicide after hearing of her son's dis-grace. She was brought to with grace. She was brought to with difficulty. Adelaide Stanton's real name is Edgecombe. Her father is Leroy Edgecombe, a resident of Waverly, Tioga county, this state. Herrman, in his confession to Inspector Byrnes, says he is a hotel butcher. He had met the Hammond woman about two years ago on Sixth avenue, and they had a years ago on Sixth avenue, and they had at different times lived together since as man and wife. He met Moredith, the chief conspirator, a couple of weeks before election. He introduced Meredith to the Stanton woman. The outcome of the matter was that about November 28 Meredith told Hermann he had fixed it all with Addie Stanton for a big strike and he would give Hermann $15,000 to take a hand. The scheme was to write letters to men of wealth and prominence to entice them into the flat. The first one to fall into the trap "and was any good," or had any reputation or money was to be chloroformed and robbed. They calculated to get about $30,000 from Daly by threats and blackmail. Hermann was as-signed to the task of ticing and torturing the prisoner. Daly, one of the chosen victims came once, and the chance was allowed to pass. Meredith reproached Hermann for th slip. The Hammond woman, who was a sort of silent partner in the scheme, was out o of stient partner in the scheme, was out of the flat when Daly passed through the ordeal. She did not wish to be present at the time. The two men played cards in the kitchen while the Stanton woman watched for the gambler. What followed has already been
